

Structural changes

Tipp von Oliver Friedrich

In general, it is no problem to move from a white to a red because reds are usually more powerful in structure. However, if you're drinking a white with more pronounced aromas, say a macerated Chardonnay, and are planning to move on to a red afterwards, try to choose one with enough structure that it will not be overpowered.